Step 4: Summary (in English and in French)

- If we are more interested in the person or thing affected by the main verb, we use the passive voice.
- Structure: subject + to be* + past participle (+ by + object)

*The verb to be changes to reflect the tense/verb form that is needed

English version

The basic structure of an English sentence is the following:

Subject + Verb + Object

[The man (subject)] [kidnapped (verb)] [the children (object)].

This sentence is in the active voice. The focus is on the person who performed the action.

Using the passive voice allows us to focus on the object (that is, the person or thing that is affected by the action).

In the sentence "The children were kidnapped by the man", the focus is not on the person who committed the kidnapping, but on the children who were kidnapped.

The passive voice is formed in English in the following way:

auxiliary be (in the appropriate tense) + past participle of the verb* *regular verbs take the -ed form, while irregular verbs use the past participle form (third column in the list of irregular verbs).

The agent (the person who performs the action) can optionally be indicated using the preposition by.

Attention : version anglaise à faire !

Example 1

Active sentence:

The cat ate the mouse.

Tense of the active sentence: preterite (irregular verb to eat – ate).

→ therefore the auxiliary be in the passive sentence will also be in the preterite.

→ it must agree with the subject of the passive sentence (here: the mouse → third person singular → was).

The verb eat will be used in the past participle form: eaten.

Passive sentence:

The mouse was eaten by the cat.

Example 2

Active sentence:

She has broken her glasses.

Tense of the active sentence: present perfect (have + past participle of the verb to break).

→ therefore the auxiliary be in the passive sentence will also be in the present perfect: have been.

→ the irregular verb break remains in the past participle form: broken.

Passive sentence:

Her glasses have been broken.

Here, it is unnecessary to add the agent (by her).

Example 3

Active sentence:

He will write the sequel to the trilogy in the next few years.

Tense of the active sentence: future with will.

→ therefore the auxiliary be in the passive sentence will also be preceded by will.

→ the irregular verb write is used in the past participle form: written.

Passive sentence:

The sequel to the trilogy will be written in the next few years.

French version:

La structure de base d'une phrase en anglais est la suivante :

Sujet + Verbe + Complément

[The man (sujet)] [kidnapped (verbe)] [the children (complément)].

Cette phrase est à la voix active. L'attention se porte sur l'auteur de l'enlèvement.

Utiliser la voix passive permet de se focaliser sur le complément (c'est-à-dire ce/celui/celle qui a été affecté.e par l'action (verbe)).

Dans la phrase The children were kidnapped by the man, l'attention se porte non pas sur l'auteur de l'enlèvement, mais sur les enfants qui ont été enlevés.

Le passif se forme de la manière suivante en anglais :

auxiliaire be au temps approprié + participe passé du verbe* *forme V-ed pour les verbes réguliers, ou forme irrégulière du verbe (3^{ème} colonne dans la liste des verbes irréguliers).

L'agent (celui qui fait l'action) peut éventuellement être indiqué à l'aide de la préposition by.

Exemple 1 :

Phrase active: The cat ate the mouse. Le chat a mangé la souris.

Temps de la phrase à la voix active : preterit (verbe irrégulier to eat – ate) > donc l'auxiliaire be de la phrase passive sera lui aussi au preterit.

> Il faudra l'accorder avec le sujet de la phrase passive (ici: the mouse > 3^{ème} personne du singulier > was)

Le verbe eat sera utilisé au participe passé, pour devenir eaten.

➤ Phrase à la voix passive : The mouse was eaten by the cat. La souris a été mangée par le chat.

Exemple 2 :

Phrase active : She has broken her glasses. Elle a cassé ses lunettes.

Temps de la phrase à la voix active : present perfect (have + participe passé du verbe to break) > donc l'auxiliaire be de la phrase passive sera lui aussi au present perfect (3^{ème} personne du pluriel – on accorde avec le sujet de la phrase passive) : have been.

> Le verbe irrégulier break reste au participe passé : broken.

➤ Phrase à la voix passive : Her glasses have been broken. Ses lunettes ont été cassées.

Inutile ici d'ajouter l'agent (by her).

Exemple 3 :

Phrase active : He will write the sequel to the trilogy in the next few years. Il écrira la suite de la trilogie dans les prochaines années.

Temps de la phrase à la voix active : expression du futur avec will ;

> donc l'auxiliaire be de la phrase passive sera lui aussi précédé de will.

> Le verbe irrégulier write sera au participe passé : written.

➤ Phrase à la voix passive : The sequel to the trilogy will be written in the next few years. La suite de la trilogie sera écrite dans les prochaines années.

Step 11: For teachers Reading (for teachers and/or students): An interesting article on how using the passive voice can be used as a manipulation tool to distort our vision of the past: https://www.nytimes.com/2015/10/22/opinion/how-texas-teaches-history.html Reading: Students underline or highlight all passive voice examples to be found in a newspaper article and discuss why the journalist chose the passive form (e.g., focus on object, agent unknown, etc.). Writing: Students choose a device (examples in the list below), then write a short explanation of how it works, using the passive voice as much as possible. In class, you will use your notes to explain the device to a partner. A smartphone / A washing machine / A coffee machine / A 3D printer / A laptop... Speaking: Guessing game Preparation: Prepare slips of paper, each containing a short paragraph in the passive voice describing how a device works (e.g., a toaster, washing machine, 3D printer), without mentioning the name of the object on the slip. In class: Give one slip of paper to each student (or pair/small group, depending on class size). Students take turns reading their description aloud to their group. The rest of the students try to guess which object is being described.
